ABOUT AHMEDABAD

The 600-year-old walled city of Ahmedabad is recognised by UNESCO as a world heritage city, making it the first Indian city to earn that tag. The old city or the walled city of Ahmedabad is spread across 5.43 sq km and is home to havelis, old markets, historic housing clusters and shrines. Ahmedabad lies in the state of Gujarat and it is due to this fact that, Gujarati is the most widely spoken language in Ahmedabad. Common languages of Ahmedabad, India are Gujarati, Hindi and English. In informal groups, the people of Ahmedabad usually converse in their native language, i.e. Gujarati.

Ahmedabad is well known for its diversified culture. People of Ahmedabad are very passionate about celebrating each and every festive occasion then be it Navratri, the nine nights festival or the kite flying festivity. Ahmedabadis are usually very fond of food. The cuisine of Ahmedabad consists of such yummy lip smacking dishes that you'll be tempted to try out more and more food each time you enter into a restaurant. The cultural heritage of Ahmedabad is very rich.

People of Ahmedabad, India are very lively and cherish each and every moment of their lives. They believe in living life in a very simplistic manner. When it is the time for festivity, the whole city gets excited and celebrates the festive occasion with zest and zeal. People out here are very fond of food. This explains the reason why the restaurants and cafes in Ahmedabad are always thronged by people. The richness of architecture present in Ahmedabad is enhanced by the cultural fusion of Hindu and Muslim elements. What gives Ahmedabad its distinct flavour as opposed to any other Indian metropolis or industrial hub, is that despite being a modern centre for commerce and industry, the city owed very little to the Western world for attaining that modernity.
